

Barolo Docg Vigna Terlo Costa Grimaldi

Vintage 2013

Denomination: Barolo Docg

Variety: Nebbiolo

Seasonal trend: The 2013 harvest will be remembered as "vintage of excellence".

The beginning of the vegetative cycle has in fact been conditioned by the stunted start of the spring and the average low temperatures of the months of March and April. The period between the latter and the entire month of May was characterized by abundant rainfall (on average 210 mm of rain with a total rainy period of 18 days), creating considerable difficulties with regard to the dangers associated with the fungal attacks that were nipped in the bud thanks to targeted treatments.

In June the weather conditions were gradually improved until July, which was very positive for the physiology of the vine, even though they had not managed to catch up with the vegetative growth accumulated in the previous period.

Nebbiolo da Barolo is the vine that has benefited the most from the final part of the summer season, being able to enjoy the high temperatures recorded in September and October, ideal to develop the phenolic picture that distinguishes it and to obtain wines suitable for aging.

Overall we can see that it was a challenging year for the management and management of the vineyard, but that will give us great satisfaction.

"Ripe fruit with orange peel, walnut and strawberry flavors. A wine with a full body, thin, with long tannins and a finish that lasts for several minutes. Very beautiful. Great to drink in 2021 but who can wait? "
